from newsapi import NewsApiClient

Initialize the NewsAPI client with your API key
newsapi = NewsApiClient(api_key='your-newsapi-key')

Define a function to get news articles based on a query
def get_news_articles(query):
    articles = newsapi.get_everything(q=query, language='en', sort_by='relevancy')
    return articles['articles']

Example usage
query = 'technology'
articles = get_news_articles(query)
for article in articles:
    print(f>Title: {article['title']}")
    print(f>Description: {article['description']}\n")

Considerations

- Usage Limits:
 - The free tier of NewsAPI typically has a daily request limit and might restrict the number of articles returned per request.
 - Ensure you are aware of these limits and choose a plan that fits your needs if you expect higher usage.
- Billing Information:
 - For paid plans, you will need to provide billing information.
 - Monitor your usage through the NewsAPI dashboard to avoid exceeding your limits and incurring additional costs.
- API Documentation:
 - Refer to the NewsAPI documentation for detailed information on how to use the API, including endpoints, parameters, and response formats.

Obtaining a NewsAPI key is straightforward and involves signing up on their website, selecting a suitable plan, and generating the key from the dashboard. This API key will allow you to fetch news articles programmatically, which you can then integrate into your projects, such as the news research tool described earlier.
